Mom and Dad,

We got your letter yesterday and I enjoyed reading it all more for having talked to you on the weekend. We certainly enjoyed our three-day weekend. Early Friday afternoon we drove to the Pentagon and then bicycled into town over the Memorial Bridge. We rode along the river and around the tidal basin to the John F. Kennedy Memorial and then down Independence Avenue. There were so many people as last year and having some streets blocked for the parade made it easy to ride the bicycles. It was a lot of fun just seeing the sights and watching people gathering for the evening festivities. It was a perfect day with the high temperature 84 degrees. We did, however, get warm enough to buy beer from a stand near the Old Post Office. Next we made our way to the Mall where the Folk Life Festival is set up every year in front of the Natural History Building. One of the themes for this year was Japan so we purchased a lunch from one of the vendors and ate the food with chopsticks. The next stop was on Capitol Hill where we enjoyed ice cream before heading back down the circuit around Hains Point and the return back across the Memorial Bridge. We certainly covered at least 25 miles but the pace was slow enough not to be difficult.

Dear Mom and Dad,

We got your letter yesterday and I enjoyed reading it all the more for having talked to you on the weekend. We certainly enjoyed our three-day weekend. Early Friday afternoon we drove to the Pentagon and then bicycled into town over the Memorial Bridge. We rode along the river and around the tidal basin to the Lincoln Memorial and then down Independence Avenue. There were not so many people as last year and having some streets blocked off for the parade made it easy to ride the bicycles. It was a lot of fun just seeing the sights and watching people gathering for the evening festivities. It was a perfect day with the high temperature 84 degrees. We did, however, get warm enough to buy a beer from a stand near the Old Post Office. Next we made our way over to the Mall where the Folk Life Festival is set up every year in front of the Natural History Building. One of the themes this year was Japan so we purchased a lunch from one of the stands and ate the food with chopsticks. The next stop was on Capitol Hill where we enjoyed ice cream before heading back down for the circuit around Hains Point and the return back across the Memorial Bridge. We certainly covered at least 25 miles but the pace was slow enough not to be difficult.

Saturday we were pretty tired and stayed around the house. The warm weather was returning by then and the high was 93 degrees. I spent a lot of time on the computer exercising my new 20 Megabyte hard disk which has eliminated the need for floppy diskettes and speeded up operations considerably. I am studying a new language, Prolog, which is based on the rules of logic and has been called, "the language of artificial intelligence."

Sunday morning we drove down to Springfield and played tennis with a co-worker, Mike Driscoll, and a friend of his. I hadn't played for a couple of years but Vickie has played a few times recently so we did o.k. Afterwards we had brunch at Mike's house. He made Mimosas (orange juice and champagne) and bought bagels while we provided banana bread which I had baked on Saturday. It was even warmer, the high was 97 degrees.

This morning it was already 85 degrees when I went out jogging at 6 a.m. I went over to the University at noon and it was very warm but with a pretty good breeze. I am planning to bike home from the office as Vickie is playing tennis.

Right now we don't have any travel plans but do look forward to seeing you later in the summer.

Love,

Jim & Vickie
